Users of the navigation system were required to zoom in to a specific location, and the system could only display a few lines of text at a time. Theoretically, a road map for the entire United States would require a tape with about three million feet of tape, each representing one mile. Besides the physical challenges, obtaining this amount of data was expensive, and manually updating a map to include newly mapped roads and changing the layout of some neighborhoods would be a gargantuan f678ea9f9e
